"An emisently clever and readable work, which we venture to predict will at once secure to its author a ustinguished place among American writers. It is not a novel-inst a romane—not a book of travels—not a ladi theological, build controversial, all indecent tract, in the quies of any of the three. But it is a fine issue of humor, wit and a eventure, pathos and description, woven unto just enough of acting and moving story to create a lively interest; it is, in short, the seeings, thinkings, and in some sort, perlaps, the doings of a cear sighted, callbusinstic traveler, at once a man of the world and as a locar, with the eye of an artist, the tongue of a poet, the heart of a mountaineer, ever "at home among the rocks," a bit of a Panta-Ready on Saturday, PENCILLINGS BY THE WAY-A new and revised edition, by N.
